Pelvic Organ Prolapse Pelvic organ prolapse refers to the downward pushing of the organs of the pelvis outside the pelvis, causing genitals and urethra to bulge into the vagina. The organs inside the pelvis are the bladder, uterus, rectum and bowels (large and small). When the organs move outside of the pelvis they are said to prolapse. (See illustration above). Symptoms are referred to as "pelvic organ prolapse." Symptoms can be divided into the following four categories: Symptoms in young women Symptoms in older women Symptoms in postmenopausal women Symptoms in women with a history of pelvic organ prolapse How is pelvic organ prolapse diagnosed? Your doctor will perform a pelvic examination in order to diagnose pelvic organ prolapse. During a pelvic exam, your doctor will determine if your organs are protruding through your vagina, and if they are, your doctor will examine the extent to which your organs have prolapsed. The most common symptoms are vaginal bulging or pressure. Other symptoms include a sensation of or pain with urination, or a feeling of heaviness or pressure in the pelvis. Please see below for some frequently asked questions about urinary symptoms and pelvic organ prolapse. How do I know if I have pelvic organ prolapse? The most common symptoms of pelvic organ prolapse are vaginal bulging and pressure. This can be felt directly by the patient, or it can be felt by your doctor with a pelvic exam. In a pelvic exam, your doctor will palpate the area inside your vagina
